GLOBAL BRANDING

In the borderless economy based on commodity production, your brand can be the most important asset to set your product/service apart from competitors. Companies are moving from the price competition and more relying on the emotional punch that their brand offers to win consumers and maximize their sales and profits. Not long ago Motorola was perceived by the consumers as tech-driven seller of products, not a brand. The enormous success of RAZR, the ultra-light and very thin cell-phone changed their image and helped the company to position itself as a major consumer brand. The key to successful branding is creating the ultimate satisfying experience that the consumers remember by focusing on the look and feel of the product and not so much on the price.

Guidelines of Building Global Brands:

- Build a strong home base

Follow the rule of 80/20 by focusing on the needs and expectations of twenty percent of your local customers that provide the eighty percent of business.

- Target the international competitive markets

Focus on entering foreign markets that you can leverage your competitive advantages based on your core value, longevity in the business, market specialty, how your product is made or leadership in product/service or technology.

- Take advantage of co-branding and foreign distributors strength

Building your brand awareness in a foreign market through co-branding strategy and distributors established brands help you to achieve early success. The distributors provide you with the customers and get the recognition you need to promote your products and services in a particular market.

- Niche marketing

As you move into the consumer awareness phase in the foreign country, target the niche markets where there is little or no competition, potential growth and your product/service have a strong appeal on the part of consumers.

- Go global act local

Respect the cultural differences to make the emotional connection with the foreign audience. Stephen Covey's best seller book, "Seven Habits of Highly Effective People" sold less than 5000 copies when it was first translated into Japanese. Instead of a literal translation from English, the book was reworked to convey meaning in a style that fits the Japanese way of thinking which sold over million copies in Japan.

- Appoint local companies to develop culturally appropriate and sensitive marketing campaign

A successful campaign needs to have a clear, defined objective and a powerful idea or icon that captures the imagination of the global customers.

Global branding gives you edge in premium pricing, attracting co-branding, licensing opportunities, hiring the best employees and exercising power in any type of negotiations. In the global economy almost everything can be commoditized, your brand is the only invaluable asset to win the hearts and minds of consumers.
